The National Trust Main Street Center is seeking energetic and creative individuals for two positions :

[Please reply by August 15, 2007]

ASSISTANT DIRECTOR FOR RESEARCH & TRAINING

Building upon the success of the past quarter century of innovation in building a successful movement of more than 1,500 grass-roots organizations across the nation, the Assistant Director for Research & Training will play a crucial role in building the national Main Street brand through the development and delivery of new information and analysis that will support the revitalization of Main Streets across the nation.

We are seeking a creative individual who can take our existing research, information, education and training systems to the next level of effectiveness and relevancy, using new information, technologies and expanded partnerships. This position will work directly with the Director of the National Trust Main Street Center at our headquarters in Washington DC, to develop long-term strategies for research, outreach, and communications that will expand the reach and effectiveness of the Main Street Approach. Key roles include:

- Research & Communications: Conducts basic research and data collection on priority topics for the Center to be used in publications, website resources content, and presentations.
- Training & Education: Coordinates the Center's educational training services, with a priority on creating new content, venues and technology for the delivery of educational content in the Center's primary venues; including these annual events organized by the Center, such as Certification Institute in Professional Main Street Management © and the National Main Streets Conference.
